

INT. HOME - DAY

A morning show interviewer has just connected with Wade, a famous video game creator, over video chat. They run the interview from their home, streamed live to the news.

INTERVIEWER

We're thrilled to have Wade Park, creator of the game that's sweeping the globe faster than Pale Fever, on for an exclusive interview this morning.

Wade tries to smile.

WADE

Glad to be here.

INTERVIEWER

Before we really jump into it, I'd love to take us back to where it all started.

Wade gives a charming chuckle.

WADE

Oh, again?

INTERVIEWER

We can't start without talking about the infamous video that made America fall in love with you!

WADE

If America demands it.

INTERVIEWER

Most people hadn't heard of you before this video hit Instagram, and a few hours later, there were few people who hadn't. You dropped that video on the internet the day your game went live, and since then, your game has become one of the biggest success stories in history.

WADE

I don't know that I'd go that far...

INTERVIEWER

You've sold more units than any other game on the market, and you have an active user base of nearly half a billion players, numbers we haven't seen for a video game ever. Not only that, but you've worked to make sure the internet has been more accessible across the world, and you've even helped figure out how to safely deliver essential items to underserved areas.

WADE

Well, when you put it that way, I almost sound like a genius.

INTERVIEWER

Some might go that far.

WADE

It does help that people are trapped inside.

INTERVIEWER

And that's the best part of the game, isn't it? We're inside, but with the help of your game, we don't have to be inside alone.
